Let V-One take the hassle out of charter

It is the job of every personal assistant (PA) to ensure that their CEO is where they need to be, when they need to be. However, with transport becoming more and more difficult both inside the UK and throughout Europe, this is a more challenging task than it may first appear. Roads are generally busy throughout the day, trains cannot guarantee to run on time and planes cannot guarantee to fly on time, particularly if you have to wait for a late passenger.

More and more PA's are turning to private aircraft charter to increase the productivity of their CEO and in this interview Laura tells us her personal experience of using V-One to provide this solution.

My CEO saves, on average, four hours per day by chartering our own aircraft, factored over a year there's a huge amount of time saved when he's travelling.

But it's not just about saving time, using V-One gives me access to the most convenient airports - over 1000 in all - and we can move to our own schedule. V-One can even arrange swapping between an airplane and helicopter when it's needed.

Their own flight standards policy is incredibly thorough, with safety and legality understandably their top priority. I know that they conduct regular supplier audits to ensure that any aircraft we charter from them exceed industry-accepted levels and are flown and maintained to stringent public transport standards. That alone is incredibly reassuring.

The 24-hour flight services department at V-One monitor every flight from start to finish. From our first call they can have a flight moving in minutes so in a real emergency I know I can count on them to help.

Using V-One makes my life much easier - I can get on with my job because I have complete piece of mind in their ability. They communicate well, are honest and do a really professional job for us. In fact, I'd go as far as to say they're a breath of fresh air in their approach.

V-One deal with all of our requirements, no matter how complex, but still deliver that personal service you get from smaller companies. After working with V-One, I wouldn't use anyone else!
